

ABSTRACT

In a computer network, an object identifier relating to the 5 identity of a network component is generated by applying an algorithm to manufacturer's data stored in a memory associated with the component. An MIB correlating the generated object identifier and the component description is produced by applying the same algorithm to corresponding 10 data items in a manufacturer's product database and correlating product description information with the generated object identifier data.